Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurHenry Wallace 's major terrorist case has unexpected consequences. Sentence Adjourned will delight the many readers of Paul Genney's first novel, Pleading Guilty, which introduced us to that most unlikely anti-hero, Henry Wallace, an ageing provincial barrister at odds with the world and the legal establishment. Things are looking up for Henry Wallace as his career goes from strength to strength; a major terrorist case at The Old Bailey, a complex and very lucrative civil action, a murder case and even a brief to defend his own Head of Chambers but with his workload considerably reduced by getting a brilliant pupil, Jas, to assist him. As Jas burns the midnight oil on Henry's behalf this allows Henry to give time to his personal life and the search for a lady friend to replace Pauline. But all is not as it seems, and Henry's life is turned upside down and disaster beckons. One of The Times' Legal Books of the Year and a must read novel for lawyers.

Revue de presse Since 1983, Dedalus has been publishing books, many of them frankly on the fringes, but most of which wouldn't make it into English if it weren't for this tiny company with two employees. Their ambitiously esoteric list boasts a number of minor European classics, originally written in Finnish or Flemish or French, quite a few described in their catalogue as decadent or grotesque. They operate on the margins and struggle for funding but the world would be a poorer place without them. This anthology of 16 pieces is a case in point. Fiction from Estonia one of the smallest countries of the European Union is never going to compete for sales with the life and druggie times of Amy Winehouse. But it's a significant contribution to our literary culture and a reason to cherish a press such as Dedalus. --Keith Richmond in Tribune

This chunky book gathers together fiction by Estonian authors dating from the 19th century to today. With a range of prose and discourse styles, it features strong pieces including a semi-autobiographical work by Jaan Kross about a student in World War 11, Eeva Park's startling account of relationship troubles and extracts from a diary by Mati Unt that challenges readers with its lack of punctuation. It's a neat bundle for anyone for anyone wanting to dive into the creative depths of Estonia. --AP in Buzz Magazine
